

Student Leaders Reflect on the Music Festival

For the Music Festival, each class developed its own unique ideas and approaches. One class leader even shared advice with classmates the day before the festival, saying, "If you wake up six hours before the performance, your voice will sound more beautiful." It was a moment that truly reflected the students' passion and enthusiasm for the event.

We interviewed Chairperson Aoi Tsuda and Vice-Chairperson Yuma Fukuta, who led the Executive Committee throughout the preparation process.

Q: This was the first Music Festival held in this format. How was your experience?

Tsuda: "Third-year students had only experienced competitions before, so there was not the same sense of tension during rehearsals. However, since there were no rankings or awards this time, everyone was able to perform with smiles on the day of the festival, and we all enjoyed the experience."

Fukuta: "It was sometimes difficult to keep everyone's motivation high, so raising the overall level of enthusiasm was challenging. Nevertheless, the event turned out to be something that everyone could enjoy."

Q: There must have been difficulties along the way. As leaders, what efforts did you make?

Fukuta: "I tried to approach everything with energy and positivity. By doing so, I hoped to lift the atmosphere and encourage everyone around me."

Tsuda: "Many of the problems that needed to be solved ended up coming to me. While accepting that responsibility, I tried not to let it bother me too much and continued focusing on how our choir could improve. Through this experience, I learned how important it is to manage my emotions."

Q: What did you gain from your experience as leaders?

Tsuda: "I learned the importance of constantly thinking about what I could do for my class and working together with others to create something meaningful."

Fukuda: "I learned that one of the most important qualities of a leader is leading by example."

We have received many messages from guests and parents expressing how wonderful the Music Festival was!!
